Principles of Research Design and Drug Literature Evaluation 2014-03-07

this study was a quasi experimental pre test post test design the purpose of this study was to evaluate the effectiveness of a current nutrition lesson how to read a food label at upper darby high school the subjects were 9th 10th 11th 12th grade students the subjects were minors so parental consent was obtained before the study took place all of the students were enrolled in an introduction to foods class at upper darby high school where they learned about their diets and how to make educated food choices based on their own personal needs the students took pre and post tests that were identical so as to compare the students scores after the pre test the students were taught a lesson on how to read a food label from their existing text book food for today the test was created by the researcher and developed by using the school's current lesson and the class test book as a base the data of the students pre and post test was analyzed by comparing the mean median and range of both tests each student's individual pre test and post test scores were compared to analyze individual differences there were nine subjects whose test results were reviewed since they had returned signed permission slips out of the nine only eight completed both pre and post tests the tests consisted of ten questions for a total of ten points for each test the results showed that the mean had a light increase of 0.3 points from pre test to post test the median also increased slightly by 0.5 points from pre test to post test the range data was the same for both pre and posts tests the results for this study cannot be generalized because there were only eight subjects the subject population was that of high school students from one particular intro to foods class no other population was looked at in this study the outcome was expected to show the subjects scoring higher on the post test than the pre test two out of the eight subjects did just that their post test scores improved after taking part in the nutrition lesson the other six subjects test scores stayed the same for both the pre and post test out of those six subjects four received a perfect score on both the pre and post test this finding implies that the subjects had previous lessons on a similar or the same topic the results showed that all of the subjects test scores increased from pre test to post test or stayed the same no test scores dropped from pre test to post test this indicates that the lesson did have a positive effect on the subjects and they were able to apply the skill of reading a food label to take the post test there were several procedural issues with this study and thus some improvements would be recommended recruiting students for this study would have yielded more subjects results to analyze if the study was open to the entire school s student population in using just the one class only eight subjects results were obtained in reviewing the literature for this study it was found that there are very few studies done on how high school students make food choices based on reading food labels there were no studies found regarding whether high school students can or cannot read and interpret food labels properly the researcher suggests that more studies be conducted and that the subjects be followed through their adolescence to see what effects the proper use of food labels will have on the adolescents in their adult lives
